Connally to Treasury; Kennedy in New Post

By Fred Farris

WASHINGTON, Dec. 14-President Nixon today named a leading Texas Democrat, former Gov. John B. Connally, to be Secretary of the Treasury, replacing David M. Ken-nedy, who will become a roving ambassador dealing mainly with European economic affairs.

The Connally appointment, personally announced by the President, was a surprise and Washington observers immediately assigned a political significance to it. Mr. Connally, 53, a Houston lawyer. was a protégé and close aide of former President Johnson, and served as President Kennedy's first secretary of the Navy.

President Nixon's economic policies have been in deep trouble in he present Democratic-controlled Congress and his nomination of a Democrat with links to the preceding administrations is seen as a bid to improve Capitol Hill support for Nixon programs.

The President put it this way as he spoke with the press while the tall, handsome Texan smiled at his side: "We have a Republican Presi-

Some Pennsylvania Convicts To Spend Christmas at Home

HARRISBURG, Pa. Dec. 14 (AP).-Pennsylvania officials are planning to let some prisoners go home for weekends, some of them in time for Christmas, to help them get ready for freedom when their jail term is up.

"Most prisoners are returned to the community sometime," said State Attorney General Fred Speaker. "If we keep them walled up all the time and let them go, the change is too abrupt." Speaker said about 50 prisoners, most of them nearing the end of their terms, are eligible for the furloughs. Most of them are now detained at pre-release centers, where they work and sometimes live outside of jail,

Mr. Speaker said he had considered "conjugal visits" for model prisoners, but said the furlough system was "an impressive alternative." Convicts serving life sentences or those whose families live out of state are not eligible. . Not Sure It's Right Thing

"I'm not sure if we're doing the right thing," said Mr. Speaker, but I do know that what we have been doing until now has not been entirely right. We have to try these new approaches Connecticut has a similar program and reports there have been no escapes because of it.

Allyn Sielaff, state commissioner of corrections, said that while the program is aimed at getting prisoners ready to reenter society it may reduce homosexuality in jails.

"We've got to develop alternatives to the completely artificial way of life the men lead in these institutions," said Mr. Sielaff. "Our failure to prepare a man for his return to the com-munity breeds more crime," said Mr. Speaker.

Two Mideastern Views

Israeli Defense Minister Dayan made it clear that he did not come to the United States to negotiate with Washington, and that this was a matter for direct talks between Premier Golda Meir and President Nixon, And, while King Hussein of Jordan was not as candid about the limitations of his own influence in the Arab world, those limitations are well known. Nevertheless, the effect of the two visits on American public and official opinion could be considerable.

It must be conceded that the king came off rather better from the exchange than the minister of defense, Gen. Dayan asserted that Israel would negotiate under no preconditions, and would require assurances that there would be no intervention by the Security Council. He stated quite flatly that Israel would not be content with merely "minor rectifications" in her borders with the Arab states, and he was equally emphatic in rejecting any UN peace-keeping force on Israeli soil.

King Husseln, on the other hand, sald that direct Soviet-American association with peace-keeping "might simplify matters." He appeared willing to accept some territorial adjustments, but said, with logic and practical good sense, that "secure boundaries in this time and age do not exist except if there is justice and a desire on both sides to maintain a state of peace."

Therein lies the weakness of Gen. Dayan's contention that Israel must hold strategic frontiers, and his assertion that Israel had found no substitute for her own forces as a guarantee for peace. For Israel's own forces have not, in fact, guaranteed peace, nor is there any likelihood that they would be able to do so, whatever frontier adjustments might be made. Nor can a state whose basis for existence in international law is founded on the decrees of the United Nations afford to dismiss too lightly the words or acts of the world organization.

The United States cannot dictate to Israel-or will not. That has been proved on any number of occasions, including the 1967 war. But neither can the United States afford to give Israel long-term assurances of military and diplomatic support if Israel adopts positions that will not only insure continued Arab hostility (that may be unavoidable) but also Soviet support for the Arabs, plus chilliness toward Israel from the rest of the Western powers and strong anti-Israeli activity within the UN. .

There are, of course, good emotional and historical reasons for the stand Gen. Dayan has taken. King Hussein's moderation is not typical of the Arab leadership, and may not even prevail in his own divided country. But the United States has its own emotional. historical and highly practical reasons for being troubled over the Dayan view of the Middle East and welcoming that of the king.

Switch in Vietnam Policy?

The most critical question raised by President Nixon's threat to resume the bombing of North Vietnam if Hanol's forces "increase the level of fighting" in the South is whether a decision already has been made to reverse policy and re-escalate the war.

Senators Fulbright and Symington interpret recent events as evidence that this decision has been made. Administration officials assert that the President's news conference statement merely has made more explicit previous warnings of retaliation if North Vietnam steps up infiltration and endangers American troops in the South as their numbers are reduced.

Time will show which thesis is correct. But the argument underlines the major weakness in the program of Vietnamization. The policy of American withdrawal, while turning over conduct of the war to Saigon, depends for its completion on Communist forbearance.

So far, Hanol and the Viet Cong have held their hand. They have shifted from largeunit warfare to guerrilla operations and subversion, permitting the level of combat and casualties to decline. This, as much as allied battlefield successes, explains the military Iuli and Saigon's apparent control of regions previously contested.

President Nixon's gamble has been that Hanoi will continue to see it as being in its interest not to impede the American withdrawal, as long as it continues steadily. Hanoi is on notice that attempts to speed that withdrawal by stepping up attacks on the declining American forces might halt the process and bring back the heavy bombing of North Vietnam. The large-scale air strikes at North Vietnam in May and November were, among other things, signals that these warnings are serious.

Hanoi, however, may not be deterred forever, especially if it feels that the Viet Cong is losing too much ground politically or if the American withdrawal halts, leaving residual forces as an aid to Saigon in air support and logistics.

Moreover. President Nixon's warnings are an admission that Hanoi has the capability at any time of stepping up infiltration, as it has been doing recently, and the level of combat. That capability is a threat not only to the declining American forces but, even more, to the viability of the Saigon government after American withdrawal.

For these and other reasons a political settlement negotiated in Paris, which might embody international guarantees and supervision, would be a much more promising way both to terminate American involvement and to achieve a stable solution.

The administration pays lip service to this concept, but has failed to persevere in implementing it. November's air strikes at North Vietnam and the lil-conceived prisoner rescue attempt at Son Tay have compromised the serious peace proposals made in October, An American initiative to achieve extended year-end cease-fire might provide another opportunity to get negotia- a lecture rejecting "cries of detions going, but Mr. Nixon now appears to have ruled this out.

Moreover, the administration seems to be broadening its interpretation of the "understandings" that accompanied the full halt in the bombing of North Vietnam in November, 1968. A new rationale for resumption of bombing has been established by Mr. Nixon's news conference statement and by Secretary Laird's subsequent hint that bombing might be resumed if there were no progress in the Paris talks,

Three years of daily bombing proved by 1968 that air attacks could inflict economic and human pain, but could not weaken Hanoi's will. Nor did they significantly impede infiltration of men and supplies into the South. They did, however, make peace talks impossible.

The November bombing led Hanoi to withdraw from one session of the Paris negotiations. Resumption of regular bombing would finally scuttle the conference that, despite the current stalemate, represents the sole hope of ultimately achieving a political set-

President Nixon is holding with admirable tenacity to his program for extracting America from Vietnam while at the same time avoiding what would amount to a sellout to the Communists there. As time goes on, tension is already mounting over how Hanoi may contemplate frustrating the whole operation. We can take it as axiomatic that frustrating it, somehow, sometime, is now a first priority for the North Vietnamese capital.

Despite their more than 20 years of relatively successful "fighting and talking" to gain their objectives, things can scarcely ever have looked so umpromising for them in South Vietnam, militarily and politically. -From the Daily Telegraph (London).

It was the sight of a man walking along the street with a pocket flashlight in his hand, illuminating a tiny patch of light into which his feet steadily moved. During the Second World War it was a constant sight in any British city, as the stringently enforced black-out meant that shop windows were not illuminated at night, that street-lamps were dowsed, that anyone permitting even a chink of light to escape from his curtained windows would be committing an offense. And it is true, significantly, and perhaps ominously, true. The real hardships the strike has caused -danger to those in hospitals without emergency generators, decay of perishable foods in deep-freezes suddenly turned off, and the like-have been few and, in national terms, slight, crisis cannot be compared to that of the Blitz, of Dunkirk, even of floodwaters or train crashes that have from time to time made us realize suddenly that we are all members one of another. But it has, beyond a doubt, brought back the same feeling as all these things, and told us once again a penetrating truth about our-

The Blitz, of course, became the touchstone; many believe the British love of adversity started then. Not so: it may have been as Churchill called it, our "finest hour," but there had been such hours before (any history of the Boer War, let alone the First World War, makes it clear that the very same feeling existed then). and they have come round too often to be ascribed to coincidence, and with too much intensity to be written off as part of any universal tendency. The British are at their best and their most cheerful in adversity. And the danger in

A notable example is provided by his truncated account of events preceding his famous "secret speech" of Feb. 24-25, 1956, in which he exposed Stalin's crimes. His account in-dicates that the speech was rather sour-of-the-moment and at his suggestion, over the opposition of many colleagues. But the historical record demonstrates that public de-Stalinization really was under way before the convening of the 20th

Soviet View of Cuba Missile Crisis

By Max Frankel

WASHINGTON, Dec. 14 (NYT) -The account of the Cuban missile crisis attributed former Premier Nikita Khrushchev, though far from complete and interpreted as a victory for Soviet diplomacy, does not vary significantly from American perceptions of the

If credible, the most interesting portions of the memoirs attributed to Mr. Khrushchev bear on Soviet motives for the emplacement of missiles in the Carlbbean. The former Soviet leader takes personal responsibility for the idea and contends, as he did at the time, that his only purpose was to deter an Ameircan invasion of Cuba.

Former President Kennedy and his sides always suspected that Mr. Khrushchev had been urged or even forced into the Cuban missile buildup by his military strategists. They speculated, but could never prove, that apart from benefits in prestige and diplomacy, the Soviet leaders were seeking to move intermediate-range missiles within striking distance of the United States so as to save on the time and money needed to build up a larger force of Intercontinental weapons.

The massive buildup of Soviet long-range missiles and nuclear submarines was not decided upon until after the Soviet withdrawal from Cuba and did not begin to match the United States' strategic force until last year.

The Khrushchev memoir, like the Khrushchev speeches at the of Cubs as the only motive. thus making possible the claim of "victory" when President Kennedy traded a no invasion pledge for removal of the So-

Mr. Khrushchev's argument that Cuba had to be defended at any cost to preserve Soviet prestige and influence in Letin America, and elsewhere, is the mirror image of reasoning inside the Kennedy administration! Kennedy felt at once that acquiescence in the missile birildup would give dangerous impetus to Soviet influence in the Western hemisphere and cast doubt upon American re-

In relating some of the specific events of the crisis itself, the Khrushchev document adds nothing important to American accounts, leaves out a great deal and appears to be misleading on several points.

It acknowledges a desire to take the United States by surprise, but the Khrushchev account does not explain why his offers of a settlement came in two markedly different letters, one highly personal and emo-tional and the other much more formal and including a demand for the removal of American missiles from Turkey. It does not report anything about the Soviet decision-making process at the time and, in pretending that Mr. Khrushchev was free to do as he pleased, contradicts another portion of the Life magazine materials in which the former Soviet leader says he lost "full control" over policy to more militant anti-American factions missile support and Mr. Khrush-

Mr. Mikoyan, who was closely associated with Mr. Khrushchev's rise to power. But, pos-sibly because Mr. Mikoyan joined the coup that displaced Mr.

Khrushchev, the remembrances picture him as an ally of the hated police chief, Lavrenti P.

The description of Mr.

Khrushchev's relations with Mao Tse-tung seems deliberately tendentious, and the account of the 1958 rupture between the Soviet Union and China over the Formosa Strait crisis manages not to mention Taiwan or after the U-2 affair of 1960-30 months before the Cuban crisis. The Khrushchev version is deceptive when it claims that Soviet ships headed "straight through" the American naval blockade and that no ships were stopped or checked. According to Robert F. Kennedy's memoir, as well as other contemporary American accounts Soviet vessels stopped dead in the water or reversed course away from Cuba less than one hour before the fateful interception of three of them, including a submarine.

Unconvincing Part

The least persuasive portion of the account consists of some of the quotations attributed to Robert Kennedy, From what the President's brother has written, however, it is entirely possible that his views and words were understood-or misunderstood—in the indicated

The President's brother, in two urgent meetings during the crisis with Soviet Ambassador Anatoly F. Dobrynin, no doubt also warned that events could become "irreversible" beyond the President's retrieval and probably cited the "peculiarities" of the American system to explain the need for forceful American response and firm proof of Soviet withdrawal. It is doubtful that he expressed fear of the President's "overthrow" by "the military," but his own book records John Kennedy's feeling that if he had not moved to expel Soviet nuclear weapons from this hemisphere, "I would have been impeached" military power in Indochina. One of Mr. Khrushchev's most misleading and confusing episodes deals with his own rise to prominence in Moscow at the beginning of the 1980s. He gives credit for his promotion to Nadezhda Alliluyeva, Stalin's wife, whereas the record clearly shows he was a protege of Lazar M. Kaganovich, eventually his deadly enemy in the Politburo. Valued Document

Despite these distortions, the omissions, the probable censorships, the confusions arising from weakened memory and earnest desire for political vindication—despite all this, the value of the document to his-torians is still considerable.

Basically it gives an insider's version. When compared to the history carefully reconstructed by Western scholars, it provides insights not so much into events as into the atmosphere of the Kremlin and Stalinesque society.

One of America's greatest Soviet scholars has expressed skepticism about the validity of the remembrances. "Nowhere is there any discussion of principle," he said. "No ques-tions of ideology arise in the debates of the Politburo. They all sound like a bunch of high school students."

But this, almost certainly, is the great merit of "Khrushchev Remembers." It underscores spectacularly the venality, the banality, the petty intrigue, the crude ignarance, the ruthless rivalry of the men in the Kremlin and the society that revolved around Stalin. Ideology in the Marxist sense was left at the door along with the sidearms that military men were not al-lowed to bring into the Kremlin under Stalin.

It was a society of dangerous men who knew that their lives depended on the whim of one increasingly paranoid old man. After Stalin, Mr. Khrushchev makes plain, the atmosphere changed and some fresh air came in, largely because of him. Now, he is equally clear, the doors are slamming shut again.

Vatican Faults U.S. Priests in Political Role

Article Delayed Until Nov. Elections Passed

By Louis B. Fleming ROME, Dec. 14.—The entry of Roman Catholic priests into politics in the United States is sharply criticized in a recent English edition of L'Osservatore Romano, the official Vatican newspaper.

The article was written by the Rev. Donald Wnerl, secretary to John Joseph Cardinal Wright, head of the sacred congregation for priests, indicating that it carries the highest authority of the church on the matter. But publication of the article was deliberately held up until after the U.S. elections last month to avoid charges of interference and the article was limited to the weekly English edition of the news paper and not printed in the daily Italian edition.

The entry into American political "goes against what has long been the American political experience and the recent expression of similar experiences in the Second Vatican Council," Father Wuerl writes. Sees Paradox

"Almost paradoxically, the arrival on the political scene of the priest-office seeker comes at a time when the emphasis within the church is on the need to free priests from unnecessary duties in the secular order, thus enabling them to concentrate full time on those things which only a priest can do," the article continued.

Father Wuerl cites documents of the Vatican Council emphasizing the distinct role of laymen while priests are concerned with spiritual

In the American elections this year, seven priests were candidates. Only three survived primary elections and of these one was elected to Congress and one to the Mas sachusetts legislature.

Some of the priests, including the Rev. Robert Drinan, the Jesuit elected to the House of Representa-tives, reportedly had the permission of their superiors. C: Los Angeles Times ed the photographers and pos-ed for the cover. She also wrote some pretty pieces of poetry that are scribbled in her tall, sensitive handwriting as captions for the gift section.

Taking a last glance at the page proofs the other day (the magazine goes on sale today), Miss Moreau looked-and acted-the part of an editor, in her pretty Cardin tangerine ensemble-her glasses stuck in the neck of her outfit. She had a relaxed manner and a nice for everybody on the staff. "I accepted the challenge," she said, "because I love refined living. Luxury is essential. And Vogue stands for

"We tried to leave her completely free," said Robert Caille, director of the ma-"Of course, the magazine has a few musts, but otherwice, she did what she wanted.

A Nude

Not quite everything however. There was one nude picture that didn't make the grade. "We must be a bit careful," said Mr. Caillé, and a sheroet recipe had to be dropped for lack of space. Strangely enough, Miss Moreau didn't mind about the nude but. being a terrific cook she did moan about the sherbet. "But my housekeeper." she said, "is pleased. She didn't like my passing our recipes around."

Vogue, and other women's magazines, have been on a nudity kick for quite awhile, but Miss Moreau injected her own sexy touch. She asked five famous men to tell, with pictures, which part of the woman's body they liked best. For singer Georges Moustaki it was the innocent shoulder line but dancer Jean Babilée confessed a weakness for the navel.

influenced by her movie career. Being a beginner, it was natural that I should lean toward something I knew." So, when it came to fashion, she asked prominent Paris designers to create dream dresses that would fit in the moods of famous movie directors. Saint-Laurent chose Bunuel and Orson Welles: Ungaro, Fellini and Andy Warhol: Cardin, Ingmar Bergman and Alain Resnais; Balmain, Jean Cocteau: Givenchy, Visconti: Paco Rabanne, Fritz Lang: and Marc Bohan fell for Joseph Losey. These unique dresses, by the way, will be on sale in the couturiers' boutiques this month. Asked which one she liked herself. Miss Moreau reacted like a true fashion editor: "I really never thought of those dresses in terms of myself." she said.

The ski feature was a problem because Miss Morea i hates snow. So she came up with the idea of spoofing the whole thing with a comic strip approach and the collaboration of show business friends. Nathalie Delon and Jean-Louis Trintignant agreed to play the parts in the funny script by Prançoise Dorin. The result is a good gag and refreshingly anti-Vogue.

Somehow, Miss Moreau wasn't crazy about the cover, where she sits, looking her glamorous, mysterious self, wrapped in miles of white fox. "It's more Moreau than Jeanne," she said with her funny

Kenneth Clark's 'Civilisation'

By Thomas Quinn Curtiss

PARIS, Dec. 14.—Sir Kenneth Clark's series of thirteen 52minute color films, bearing the overall title of "Civilisation," produced by the British Broadcasting Corporation, has been enormously successful every-where it has been shown: Great Britain, the United States, Switzerland Germany, Holland and Sweden. The series is now being shown in Finland and Denmark and will be on Belgian television in January.

Negotiations with ORTF are under way, according to a BEC spokesman, and the hope is that the Clark series will be seen on French television late next year. But, in the meantime, the American Library in Paris has acquired prints of two installments and is screening them as a public service at the Grand Palais. The first showing was last week. Two are scheduled tomorrow, at 5 p.m. and 7 p.m. A-limited number of tickets (for which there is no charge) will be available at the door.

The two sections-"Prose and Communications" and "Heroic Materialism"—whet the appetite for the other eleven. The first concerns the Reformation, the invention of the printing press and the spread of unorthodox notions which set man free from the lingering hold of superstitious medievalism, trac-ing the intellectual revolt from Luther to Tolstoi. The second pictures the coming of the Machine Age, the Industrial Revolution, and the rise of capitalism in the 19th century. Sir Kenneth has devised a method of communication of his own. Instead of voicing his commentary off-screen, always an irritating procedure, he comes before the cameras to address us directly, providing a sort of Burton Holmes travel lecture of his explorations in the world of art and ideas.

He is a delightful traveling companion as with the casual tact and pleasing delivery of a seasoned British drawing-room performer he unobtrustvely conducts us about art galleries, museums, libraries and historic sites. Now he stands retiringly before Shakespeare's birthplace at Stratford as an actor appears to render some soliloguies of the Bard; now he is in Montaigne's study looking out on the rolling countryside: now he accordpanies us across New York harbor in a speedboat. He functions as the property man of the Chinese theater functions, confiding to us ingratiatingly the secrets of the scene, illuminating all with his information and asides.

The Clark view of Western man's heritage and estate is interestingly summarized in the final film. His interpretation is witty, humane, exhilarating and enormously erudite, while his artistic taste-he was a pupil of Bernard Berenson -- is impeccable. His outlook is conservative, somewhat square perhaps, but convincingly solid ( remember that this designed for popular tion and that he is ser chauffeur for culture millions. He wisely re predict the future, but two of his remarks present are open to d He believes that the

Léger, Contemporaries

By Max Wykes-Joyce masterly "Opus 47" has been ONDON, Dec. 14.—I have to confess that I have never much enjoyed the work produced by Leger in the decade 1919-1929, inspired technically by the theories of Ozenfant and Jeanneret (later famed as Le Corbusier) and visually by the machines and the geometric architecture which surrounded him. Nevertheless the current exhibition "Leger and Purist Paris," running at the Tate Gallery to Jan. 24, is an exciting show, not so much for what it revives of Léger's work itself, though this is considerable, but for the opportunity to compare his work with that of his coutemporaries, such as Gris, Pi-casso, Jeanneret and Braque in this genre, and in its revival of the work of a number of unjustly forgotten painters.

Of these, two especially should be mentioned—the Belgian Vicfor Sevrankox (1897-1965) whose

The administration has decided that the basic economic statistics prepared in various government agencies, and the experts who prepare them cannot be trusted to speak directly to the public.

Not only has the administration undertaken its own inter-pretations of some of the fig-ures, but recently it has also come forth with some different figures of its own.

The resul can only be, as it has been, confusion and, worse, the development of skepticism about the integrity of the basic statistics.

The latest case involved what is surely the most politically. sensitive of all the statistics: unemployment figures.

The experts at the Bureau of Labor Statistics, in explaining that all of the drop stemmed from the strike.

The argument here centered a November increase, said that some of it obviously could be attributed to layoffs in comboth on statistical methodology and on simple reasoning such panies that were suppliers to as the question, asked by Fed then strike-bound General Moexperts: If it was all GM, why then strike-bound General Mo-tors, but that they could not estimate exactly how much. press secretary, Ronald L. Ziegler. paraphrasing a Council of Economic Advisers memorandum, said that the unemploy-ment rate could have been as much as half a percentage point lower in November, without the strike, and implied that the rate would have fallen from the October level. First of all, that implication was wrong. The council did not claim that the unemployment rate would have declined in November without the strike. Secondly. the council had actually estimated the effect at 0.4 percent, which was rounded up to 0.5 percent in Mr. Ziegler's statement. Whether the error was Mr. Ziegler's cannot be established since no one will permit publication of

MODERN MEXICO?

Money is what makes the wheels go around in Mexico's present controlled economic explosion. Alert international investors have discovered Mexico all over again and play a big part in the proliferation of industries, the country-wide speed-up in consumer services, the dramatic growth and robust health of the economy. Which means that here's a true "investor's market"-- already established, with plenty of room for you and others like you who search the world's money markets for maximum yield-minimum risk opportunities.

A U. S. Chamber of Commerce report says: "Mexico has enjoyed one of the highest rates of economic growth in the world in recent years." No exchange control, for instance-- which means capital, profits, and dividends may be transferred freely in and out of Mexico. A gross national product increase last year of 6.4% with prices rising only 3.5%. No wonder informed observers call Mcdern Mexico the standout example of responsible government and business in Latin America!

Just take a look at a few things Mexico can do for you NOW:

* 12% BANK TIME DEPOSITS: These loans to Mexico's Industrial Development Banks offer 11.25% (interest payable monthly) on 2-year terms...up to 12% on 5-year terms which becomes 15% when re-invested and compounded. Ideal for person no longer earning independent income. Minimum investment: $4,000 U.S. dollars.

* 9% DEMAND DEPOSITS: Earning 9% payable quarterly, here's liquidity for any portfolio. Each Demand Deposit represents a priority claim upon the resources of an Industrial Development Bank Minimum investment: $ 2,000 U.S. dollars.

* After Mexican taxes. AWLASA... READY WHEN YOU ARE! If inflation is your worry, why not ride with the times in Modern Mexico? Just compare. If weknew of a better place for your investment money, we'd advise you to put it there. Frankly, we don't. # Own the Big Stocks in the Next Major Wave of Growth Activity

The new generations of communications and computer equipment will make it all happen again—just the way it happened from 1964 up when the old FAIRCHILD CAMERA rose from $20 to $200 while TEXAS INSTRU-MENTS climbed from $30 to $144. And if you know a lot of skeptics who say a boom like the old one can't develop of skeplics who say a boom like the old one can't develop in today's bad-news atmosphere, ask them what they were saying six and seven years ago when foundations were being dug for the last growth-industry eruption. Robert McNamara had been cleaning up the Pentagon, you may remember; and all the high-technology stocks which later multiplied many times over were in massive public liquidation because of discouraging statistics.

While bad news is frightening to most people, there are others who make it their business to tackle causes and come up with solutions. These are the interests which build new bull markets out of the discards shaken loose by cyclical contractions; and to plot and project progress out of mid 1970's depths of confusion KAB keeps in direct communi-1970's depths of confusion KAB keeps in direct communication with innovators in new growth disciplines ranging from computer output microfilm (COM) to metal oxide semiconductors (MOS).

The weekly KAB studies that will help you attune your planning and investing to the new upswing are available on a trial basis at $5 U.S. for our next five reports—returnable if you are not impressed

South's response of four hearts to his partner's takeout double was on the aggressive side, and some players would be content to bid three hearts. His jump to six diamonds in response to Blackwood showed the diamond void and an ace, so North made an optimistic jump to seven hearts, failing to allow for the possibility that there could be a trump loser. The declarer turned pale when the dummy appeared. But he felt better after a little thought, for he could place virtually every card in the opponents' hands.

West's trump lead indicated that he did not hold the heart queen, and as a singleton trump would be a risky lead, the queen could be expected to fall from the East side under the ace, king. There were 13 high-card points missing in the other suits, and West surely held all of them to justify his opening bid. On that analysis, it was possible to foresee a squeeze against West in the minor suits to make the slam.

His play succeeded. Dummy's top hearts were played, dropping the queen, and the spade ace was cashed. A diamond was ruffed, and a spade finesse was taken successfully. The remain-

But 1970 should at least be remembered as the year in which Maurice Sendak's 'In the Night Kitchen" was published, which makes it a very good year after all. I have just finished "reading" Mr. Sendak's picture book for about the dozenth time, andit has not yet palled in the slightest. In fact, I'd venture to guess that it will eventually become some sort of classic. And like all truly original crea-tions, it has already begun to stir up controversy.

The book is not easy to describe. To say that it is visually superb-boldly designed, enchantingly colored in muted shades, endlessly fun to explore and a remarkable stylistic de-parture from Mr. Sendak's previous work seems almost beside the point.

A summary of its plot tells very little: A small boy named Mickey wakes up in the night, hears a thumping coming from below his room and shouts for "Quiet down there!" Suddenly he is falling "through the dark, out of his clothes, past the moon and his mama and papa sleep-ing tight, into the light of the night kitchen?" There three enormous pink-nosed bakers (each of whom looks like Oliver Hardy) mistake Mickey for milk, stir him into the batter for a cake they are preparing and pop him into an oven.

But Mickey pops right out again, crying, "I'm not the milk and the milk's not me! I'm. Mickey!" Then he shapes the batter into an airplane and Hes up into the night "and over the top of the Milky Way in the Night Kitchen to a gigantic milk bottle towering over a city made of oversize food packages and kitchen utensils. He climbs out of his airplane, dives into the milk, scoops up a jugful, pours it over the rim of the bottle into the batter standing below, then floats gently down to his bed "cakefree and oried," and falls back to sleep, "Yum!"

Now, when I first read "In the Night Kitchen," I found myself charmed by Sendak's visual wit, but mildly disturbed by the idea of Mickey submerged in the cake batter and cooking in the oven. Wouldn't a child find this quite terrifying? Then I began to probe my anxiety and to consider other elements of the story—the thumping downstairs that awakens Mickey, his floating and flying, the milk and the many suggestive visual images in the illustrations. And the more I thought about it the more "In the Night Kitchen" appeared to be an orchestra-tion of sexual dream symbols.

By Robert Lipsyte

NEW YORK, Dec. 14 (NYT).

—A portrait of the professional athlete as a potential fixer: "You have a family to support, and an alling knee. You know you've got a year or two left, at most. Maybe less if the bonus rookie works out well. You love attention, most athletes love attention, and you're an offensive lineman and you haven't been getting much attention since college. Now here's someone you met at the bar, friendly, ingratiating. He starts picking up tabs, doing you little favors, getting you things wholesale, fussing over you. You start talking freely to him, start telling him things that will help him bet the

"You're a quarterback, or the scorer on the basketball team; $50,000 a year, but that's not going to last much longer. And you could start putting away some money, tax free, if you just make sure the point spread works out right for your friend. Maybe you get a couple of teammates in on it. You can rationalize it all in your mind; you're not really throwing a game, you'll still win, and the only people who will get hurt are bookies and illegal gamblers. But that's how it starts, you're in their clutches, and you're cheating."

The portrayer is John L. Brennan, a private investigator who tends to look at games through a magnifying glass, darkly. "Money is the key," says Brennan, "profit is the motive. For everything. In all

Brennan is president of H T-ness Tracks Security Incorporated, a "fact-finding organiza-tion" dedicated to "preventing a fix or any skulduggery" in a sport that many people con-sider shady. For 20 years, Brennan was an official of a similar investigative group at the flat tracks the Thoroughbred Racing Protective Bureau, and before that a member of the Federal Bureau of Investigation heavy sports bettors and shadow athletes who have the opportunity and motivation to tamper with "the integrity of the spectacle." Brennan belives that no single sport can police itself as effectively as all sports in cooperation.

As he explained it one day last week in his midtown office, the all-sports agency would be able to afford a bureau of fulltime operatives in every major city. At present, major league sports security is drawn thin nationally, he says, and often must depend on part-timers, in-dustrial security chiefs who cannot always jump right into an investigation, and who usually are not able to develop long-term information.

The full-time investigator would be able to cultivate the local intelligence units, gaining access to their files and sharing information: Are the local crooks interested in sports? Which ones? Do they bet heavilv? Spot checks of the city's major league players would be made; are they in to loan sharks, hanging out in undesi-rable bars, bitter at team management? What about the club's owner: does he have "silent" partners? Does he owe a favor to a man who "took care" of some union trouble he had in his main business?

A network of informers is essential to any intelligence operation, and easy enough to set up, said Brennan, because so many people have "a Sherlock Helmes complex or a do-gooder side." Such a network would include messenger boys and secretaries and assistant coaches and even that offensive lineman hungry for attention. Brennan thinks the breath of scandal is getting hotter: Expansion, television money, and a new interest in and accep-tance of gambling through offtrack betting increases the chance of an incident that can't be hushed up and will ruin the image of a sport. 'From a public relations point of view," said Brennan, "an all-

Brooks 2d Best in Fielding

BOSTON, Dec. 14 (AP).-Washington won team honors for the first time in 36 seasons according to the official 1970 fielding records released by the American League office, but the biggest surprise is the name that isn't there this years—Brooks Robinson.

The great Baltimore Orioles third baseman, who has led the league in fielding at his posi-tion for nine of the last ten years, including the past four in a row, was nipped this year by Cleveland's Craig Nettles, .967 to .966.

The Senators, who hadn't won a league fielding title since sharing top honors with Detroit in 1934, fielded at a 582 clip this year while finishing last in the Eastern Division. That gave them a one-point margin over the champion Orioles, who were next at .981..

New York, California and Western Division champion Minnesota tied for third place at _980_

Two Washington players took individual honors, Tim Cullen leading the second basemen with a 994 mark and Dick Bosman topping a long list of per-fect-fielding pitchers by handling the most chances, 51, without an error. Detroit also produced a pair of individual leaders in Bill Freehan and Mickey Stanley. Freehan fielded .997 to lead the catchers for the second time in his career, while Stanley led all outfielders by accepting 320 chances without an error for a 1.000 mark. California's Jim Spencer led the first basemen with a 995 percentage, while Milwaukee's Roberto Pena topped the shortstops at .979...

WASHINGTON.—I have no intention of passing judgment on Lt. Calley before his court-martial is concluded. But when I read that one of his defense attorneys said that Calley had been ordered to kill

"crerything" in My Lai including livestock and "erery living thing" I became intrigued. So I sought out a friend of mine at the Pentagon. and said: "Look, why would anyone Buchwald be ordered to kill livestock?" "Those were Viet Cong cows." my friend said defensively, "We knew for a fact that the cows at My Lai had given milk to Viet Cong soldiers. Those cows can't claim they didn't know what they were doing." "But maybe they had no choice." I protested.

Two weeks before we went into My Lai, we sent helicopters with loudspeakers over the area, warning everyone to get out. Those cows heard us. and they refused to leave. Therefore, we concluded that the cows were sympathetic to the Communist

Archaeologist Jailed for Art Smuggling

SALONIKA, Greece. Dec. 14 (UPI).-Stephan Gericke, 39, of Munich, was sentenced to seven years imprisonment today by a civil court for the illegal export of Greek antiquities.

Six of Gericke's 12 Greek codefendants received sentences ranging from five months to three years each for assisting him in the illegal trade.

Gericke came to Greece as an archaeologist in 1954 and since then travelled many times to and from Greece exporting antiquities and Byzantine icons, the court said.

that the chickens had been laying eggs for the Viet Cong for years. They were Red hens."
"What about the pigs?"

"The pigs were worse than the chickens. When we went into the village, we found warm pork still cooking in the pots in some of the huts.

"The only way Charlie could have gotten that pork was from My Lai pigs. When our men realized where the pork was coming from, they went berserk and decided to shoot every pig in sight,"

"But the ducks. Why were they ordered to kill the ducks? They weren't even from My Lat"

"In a war, innocent livestock have to be killed. You can't say to men going into battle, 'Kill the cows, kill the chickens, kill the pigs, but don't shoot at the

"It seems like such a waste of food." You people sitting back here in your comfortable offices in Washington can say you should kill this or you shouldn't kill that, but when you'e out in the field, it's different. You don't have time to ask, Is this a good cow or a bad cow? Is this chicken a local chicken or was he brought down from the North to feed Charlie? And that innocent-looking pig walking across the road. What is he really thinking?"

"Then what you're saying is the only good cow is a dead cow?" I said.

"You could sum it up that way. When we go into a village, we assume everything on legs is working for Hanoi. Sure you make mistakes. But it's still better to err than to let a chicken get away and come back to haunt you on another day."

"I imagine you can't spare dogs either," I said.

"When we say every living thing, we mean every living thing. If you make exceptions, the example will be lost on the Viet Cong. The one lesson we've learned is to let every living thing know that if it helps the enemy, someone is going to pay for it. I'm sure after My Lai that the cows in other villages are going to think twice before they give milk to Charlie."

The Artistic Talents Of a U.S. Ambassador

By Jules B. Farber

THE HAGUE.—The U.S. ambassador to the Netherlands not only donated the stained glass rosette window unveiled in a Hague church a few weeks ago; he also helped to make it. The window, about 9 feet in diameter, was the result of J. William Middendorf 2d's 12-month apprenticeship in the atelier of 70-year-old Joep Nicolas in Limburg.

I saw this as a chance to delve into a dying Dutch art," Mr. Middendorf said of his offer of the window to The Hague's English and American Episcopal Church of St. John

Mr. Middendorf, a former banker and Wall Street broker appointed to The Hague in June, 1969, checked with museum specialists and was told that the only great practitioner of the late Gothic style in stained-glass making left in Holland was Soon after, Mr. Middendorf was in the middle of Joep Nicolas's studio almost every weekend, working in shirtsleeves and a big apron.

Although he calls himself "strictly a Sunday stained-glass artist," he has become reasonably adept in the skill of making the original cartoons, propping up the pieces to see a harmonious composite emerge, and painting, as well as brushing away, to achieve shadows and muances.

"Joep taught me his own technique, which is world-famous. of putting the window into the kiln only once after all the work is done. He uses a second grisatilecopper oxide, gum arabic and water—and then brushes away to get the highlights. Four or five centuries ago, they had to put the glass into the kiln two or three times and couldn't make changes. At that pace, we'd still be working on the window.

"It took us four months to complete the rosette because Joep often stopped working to wait for me, since official duties regularly kept me from showing up to do my part. He was very patient with me. We took related Old and New Testament themes and used them in seven petals, outlined in heavy tracery surrounding a roundel with a dove, symbolizing the Holy Spirit. Depicted in realistic style are the Lamb of God, the River and Water of Life, St. Philip and the Ethiopian, and the Baptism in the early Church. You'll see 16 shades of blue in the window, instead of the more usual all white

The window was the ambassador's second foray into Dutch art. Last year he took private lessons at Delft's 17th-century Porcelyne Fles factory "to learn the secrets of this beautiful porcelain. I wanted to be able to make it in the traditional manner."

Earlier this year, he sent President Nixon a Delft blue plate of his own design. "I had done the finished drawing but didn't yet dare paint the porcelain. I turned that over to a much more skilled craftsman," he said.

This Christmas he will give 50 plates bearing his design of a Madonna and Child to diplomats, friends and the President. The first plate in this limited edition was designed by Mr. Middendorf, then copied, glazed and baked by a Dutch paintings, and his small collection of Rembrandt canvases, on loan to New York's Metropolitan Museum, are often repro-duced in the major works on the great Dutch master.

Over the years he has also assembled an outstanding collection of historical prints which trace American printmaking from 1670 to 1830. He wrote the introduction to a book published on this subject by the Smithsonian Institution Press. His print collection has been touring U.S. museums since 1969 and is currently on show at the Boston Museum of Fine Arts.
